AT A GLANCE

Situation
- Cloud-based VoIP service provider focused on SMBs in the USA and Latin America
- Based in California, USA

Challenges
- Demand for a UC client as part of the LCB VoIP services offering
- Third party solutions were difficult to manage and led to missed opportunities to capture additional revenue for LCB
- Limited engineering resources for building and maintaining an in-house solution

Synopsis

LCB Solutions recognized a need within their customer base to provide a standardized UC softphone client offering in order to remain competitive, and meet the modern UC expectations of today’s SMB customer.

After evaluating various vendors, including Broadsoft UC One and ZoIPer, LCB chose CounterPath to provide a fully customized and white-labeled version of Bria, a softphone that was already proven and well respected by many of LCB’s customers and millions of users worldwide. As a result, LCB was able to drastically reduce the total time to market for this carrier-grade solution and compete on a whole new level.

Being able to provide one standardized UC solution compatible with any PBX, call platform, and SIP service created significant more market opportunity for LCB and allowed them to capture revenue that would have previously missed out on.

Challenges

It was clear that LCB needed to adopt a UC client solution in order to remain competitive, but like many other service providers there was no shortage of projects and tasks for their engineering and support teams to work on. Developing a softphone would simply take too long and consume too many critical resources from LCB. Additionally, maintaining a softphone application, and keeping it up to date with the constant changes and updates to iOS, Android, Windows and Mac, would place significant strain on LCB’s product team.

“We needed to get going with a solution for our customers, but the workload in building and maintaining a quality product would have a major impact to our business,” said Luis Chavez, CEO of LCB Solutions Inc. “A number of the solutions we looked at were simply re-branded versions of existing mass-market softphones and didn’t offer the level of customization, engineering support, updates and care that was needed.”
The Solution

CounterPath Bria softphones were a proven solution that LCB knew would meet the needs of their customers today, and as the UC landscape continues to change. Coupled with the Stretto Platform, which is unique to CounterPath, LCB was able to deploy highly refined, self-configuring softphone clients.

With limited capacity to take on new projects, LCB relied on the CounterPath engineering team to white-label and customize the Bria clients. “CounterPath made me feel like their success was dependant on my success – a true partnership,” continued Chavez. “They were the obvious choice in terms of quality and reputation, but the automation of Stretto and the level of care that went in to making sure we got everything right the first time really made all the difference for us.”

A big factor in LCB’s decision making was ensuring the solution they chose would not lead to an increase in support tickets, post-sales support, and any extra work for service delivery. Stretto Platform Provisioning allowed them to automate the delivery process from beginning to end, and presents their end users with a simplified set-up experience. New users receive a username and password in an email with a download link to the software. From the moment they sign in, Bria and Stretto take care of the rest, auto-configuring their SIP and messaging accounts, settings, contacts and more.
